

Web Dev Topic

Creative evolution is the topic I would like to focus on for my final for the class. I would like to make a fully interactive, visually pleasing, web experience that will tell the story of not only how I evolved as an artist creatively but how many others have done it years before. I want the site to teach that creative exploration doesn't end, and that it isn't a destination for artists or designers to reach. I will display how many artist change, reinvent themselves, their art and how we can reimagine our lives to turn ourselves into legends as we face a world that wants us to submit and accept their norms while neglecting who we are.

This topic is extremely important for me right now because I have been at a turning point developing and understanding how I have developed as an artist. I have studied how other artists have changed and developed their skills and their voice. I have watched how many artists have changed themselves and their world so many times and it is a sight I love to see and I am scared that due to the way things are changing people are going to be too scared to continue.

I feel like more and more people are more scared to be more artistic even before this administration. I even changed my major in fear of ai, in fear of being replaced or laid off in the future. I have come up with a realization that I wish I knew years before. You shouldn't let the world stop you from making art. I never shouldn't have stopped animating, people shouldn't just stop making art just because of machines when that never stopped all the artists who had come before us.

This website will serve as a mural of encouragement for all Artists, I want it to display the dreams, obsessions, tactics of Artists, their quotes. I don't want it to just display my art but I want it to display the other artists that I encounter. I want it to be a living museum for all different types of artists.

The research artifacts that I will use are conversations with fellow creators, links to their interviews, links to music videos I have been in, art events and images of other things my art friends make. Old sketchbooks and journals from friends. I want the website to be a chaotic mess that visually shows how artists break out of their shells to be more creative. I would want to use other YouTube videos that encourage others to be more artistic, and I would want to link in videos that gives tips to artists that they should hear. I already do a lot of research in this so a lot of the artifacts would be easy to find. I would think to use not just my old sketchbooks for images but I would use old notes because I am also a writer and writing has helped me be more artistic. Writing is a very untapped sector when it comes to art but I plan to cover the topics of animation, illustrations, design, music, music videos, art that my friends sell, what I sell, and I plan to include as much information as possible. Some pages may just be dedicated to some artists friends who I have seen grow into their music. Some pages will be like a museum area that users could look and interact with the elements and art the artist has made, and I will link their social media and all of their networks so that the users can easily find them and connect with them.

I want to learn how artists each evolve and I want to do research on the many different ways that artists blossom into who they want to be. I want to learn how artists shed their old self so they can blossom into the person they want to be. I want the website to have many different layers of media, audio recordings, scanned pages, animations, and drawings. I will include visual story telling with typography and different elements to better tell the story. I will also include the past work and past evolutions of other Artists. I would like to figure out how to make the site a lot more interactive for the users as well.
